

Rössing Uranium scoops safety award yet again

Minister of Mines and Energy Tom Alweendo handing over the 2018 Inter-Mines competition to Rössing's manager HSE & PS, Jacklyn Mwenze, at last year's Mining Expo.

For the second consecutive year, Rössing Uranium has won the Chamber of Mines of Namibia's Inter-Mine Safety Competition Award for operating mines (Division A) in the country.

Rössing's manager HSE & PS, Jacklyn Mwenze said that this is a true testimony of the continuous commitment by everyone at Rössing towards putting safety first. She said that this is humbling and indeed very good to see that the good efforts put in place are yielding fruits for the mine, which started operations some 44 years ago.

"It is satisfying to see that less and less people are getting hurt on site.

This is our goal as we continue on the journey towards Zero Harm. I believe we can do this again next year and for many more years to come," she said.

She explained that the award is an industry recognition that we are on the right path.

"We could not have done this without each and every employee's commitment to working safely at Rössing," said Jacklyn.

She added that it is her firmly held belief that Zero Harm is possible and this award recognises Rössing's commitment towards achieving this goal.

"We have started this and we will continue working safely – expectations are high that the award should go to Rössing again, next year.

Let's do this for #TeamRössing; #onlytogether we are #safe@Rössing.